It cannot be abolished by a dispensation from the ruling caste th No one knows better than the German Liberals know that to leave the autocracy in power-to accept concessions from them-would defeat the main object of their fight. Their control of the Reichstag now seems to be decisive. A glorious opportunity is before them, if they have the courage to hold their ground.

Today the government must ask a new war credit from the Reichstag. About it the storm will break, and the meagerness of all information filtering out of Germany makes it foolish to forecast the direction it will The Kaiser's eleventh-hour franchise concessions show the fear he has for the result. The conciliating of Erzberger, the leader of the Clerical center, possibly through Austrian influence, is another step in preparation for the fight. Austria, it must be remembered, is closer to Rome than any of the powers. No doubt the Kaiser hopes to divide and smash the now dominant opposition. The chancellor apparently has been saved by some intrigue springing from Vienna. New forces have come to back him.

To save his neck Bethmann-Hollweg must reconsider his declination to dis cuss peace terms and peace prospects at the present time. The national Liberals want a definite renunciation of a war of conquest and aggrandisement. Austria-Hungary, the young Emperor Charles, are throwing their influence in the same direction.
